A HELPING HAND

RITA BACHMANN APPLIES HER FARMING BACKGROUND TO LOWCOUNTRY GARDENS

A former organic farmer, Rita Bachmann launched the gardening consulting business Rita's Roots Backyard Harvest in 2011. We spoke with Bachmann about farming, her business, and tips for South Carolina gardeners. Here are some highlights of the interview.

On her first foray into gardening:

In college I started getting interested in where food comes from, and I realized I didn't know any farmers. I remember growing my first heads of lettuce and watching them grow and grow and grow and having no idea when to harvest.

On her first farm job, in upstate New York:

I learned a lot about harvesting vegetables. And I learned how to work really, really hard, harder than I'd ever worked in my entire life.

On why she changed careers after five years of Lowcountry farming:

I never ended up owning any land of my own, but I was managing a harvest crew, a sales crew, a delivery crew. I got burned out on having so much responsibility and working endless hours that culminated in the farmers market every Saturday, and by the time that was over I had no energy to do anything.

I took a year off from farming; I guess I retired from farming. But I still had this burning passion for organic produce and getting it into people's mouths and on their dinner plate. I had a couple people in my life suggest becoming a garden consultant.

On her business model:

People generally want to grow an organic vegetable garden, and we start with our site assessment and consultation where we look throughout their yard with our solar pathfinder to find just the right spot sun-wise for their garden. We perform the garden installation or they can do it themselves.

We provide a service called Garden Guidance where I or one of my helpers goes to their garden once or twice a month. We bring all the organic gardening supplies they'll need, work side-by-side with them to teach them and coach them through the growing process. In between visits, we provide email and text message or phone call support if they have troubleshooting questions.

Sometimes we don't even see our clients; we just grow them a garden and they can come out and harvest as they wish.

I've added in gardening classes. I also recognize there is a need for good organic vegetable transplants in this area that was not being filled, so we have a very small nursery.

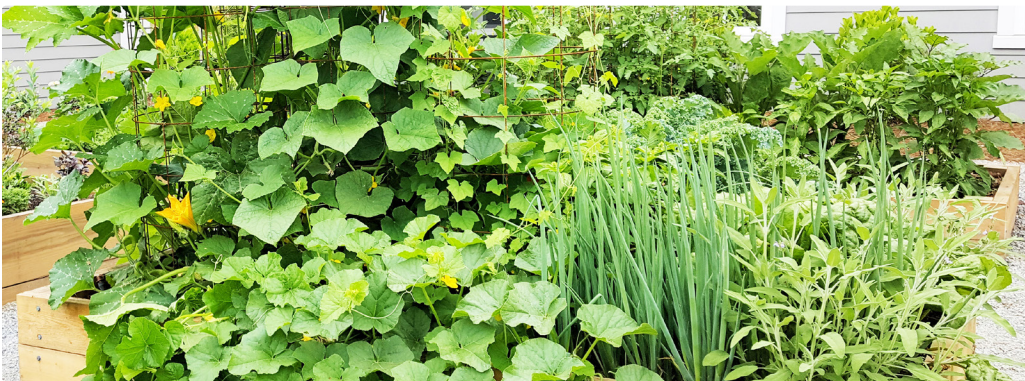

On how she uses technology:

In January I launched the Garden Growers Club, a twice-monthly communication from me to the members on what they should be doing in their garden at that time of year — what to plant now, what to do soon. Each issue has a video of some relevant garden tasks. We do one detailed vegetable of the month and go in-depth on how to grow it. We have some different recipes. We had some drought alerts, some insect alerts. In the winter we'll have frost and freeze alerts.

On when to plant your fall garden:

If you look in the USDA grower's handbook for the Southeast, specifically the Lowcountry, it tells you that you can start planting a lot of your fall crops in the middle of August, which I have found is still too hot, still too early. Maybe if you're in an agricultural situation where you have your drip lines and you're trying to make it to market early, you can kind of nurse things along, but in a garden situation I was finding too many plants were dying and the seeds weren't germinating. My personal planting calendar is shifting more toward planting at the end of September.

PUTTING SC ON THE MAP — AND THE MENU

Last week, the city of Greenville put on quite a four-day food fest called Euphoria. This year, people visited the festival from 29 different states, bringing their mouths and their tourism dollars to South Carolina for all the fun. SCDA was there on our usual mission: to promote South Carolina food and farmers.

Connecting chefs and consumers to Certified South Carolina farm products has been a major strategy of the South Carolina Department of Agriculture's since we began Certified SC Grown in 2006. When chefs know the farmers who grow their food, they can be some of agriculture's biggest allies, explaining to consumers that farmers support our economy and that local food often just tastes better. That's why SCDA participates in events like Euphoria: We can spotlight South Carolina food and farmers in front of people who pay a lot of attention to what's on their plates.

Euphoria was also a great opportunity for us to highlight the South Carolina Chef Ambassadors. We selected five chefs from around the state for 2019, the fifth year of the program — and at this year's Euphoria, we ran them pretty ragged. They cooked brunch for over 40 travel and food journalists, and did cooking demonstrations under a big tent at a daytime event called Feast by the Field, with Charleston's Lee Bros. emceeing the event.

All of our Chef Ambassadors are members of The Fresh on the Menu program, which provides an opportunity for restaurants to support farmers by using at least 25 percent Certified South Carolina products, and many other Fresh on the Menu restaurants participated in Euphoria this year.

On the final night of the festival, we all gathered for Sunday Supper, again featuring the Chef Ambassadors. I drove up from Bowman for the dinner. This big meal was held at the Barn at Sitton Hill Farm, a beautiful 99-acre property in Easley, South Carolina. The meal was served family-style, with each chef contributing dishes to the menu. Everyone enjoyed the meal and the company, and I got the chance to speak with some of the many guests about South Carolina agriculture.

Euphoria served as one more way to remind consumers about their 'bond' with our farmers. Mix in local farm products, talented chefs and eager consumers and you have a recipe for success.

GOT QUESTIONS ABOUT THE PRODUCE SAFETY RULE?

BY EVA MOORE

The Food Safety Modernization Act (FSMA) was passed way back in 2011. But when the South Carolina Department of Agriculture began inspecting large produce farms this June as part of FSMA’s Produce Safety Rule, a lot of questions began bubbling to the surface. So SCDA staff decided it was time to provide a forum to get those questions out in the open.

“We decided to have a Q&A now that inspections have started and more farmers have more questions,” said Kelly Johnson, Produce Safety Coordinator for SCDA. “What we wanted was to get everyone in the room and have a panel of all these people working on implementing the Produce Safety Rule — SCDA employees, Clemson, the Carolina Farm Stewardship Association — to answer questions for the farmers, buyers, distributors, and anyone else in the industry that has questions.”

There will even be an opportunity to ask questions anonymously before the forum by visiting surveymonkey.com/r/H2JPGGJ.

The Produce Safety Rule sets federal regulatory standards for the production, harvest, and handling of fruits and vegetables in an effort to prevent microbial contamination and reduce foodborne illnesses associated with fresh produce. And unlike GAP (Good Agricultural Practices) certification, it’s not voluntary. Some people have been confusing the two, which Johnson said is one of the biggest misconceptions about the Produce Safety Rule.

“What people need to understand is GAP is a voluntary program that is usually buyer-driven, whereas the Produce Safety Rule is mandatory — it’s a law, and they have to follow it,” Johnson explains. “If we’re there on your farm and we see an issue, you have to fix it.”

The Q&A session will be held Tuesday, October 15, 2019, from 2 to 4 p.m. at the Phillips Market Center in West Columbia. This event is free, but you must register online to attend at bit.ly/SCpsrQA. Light refreshments will be available. For additional information, contact SCDA’s Produce Safety Outreach Coordinator, Brooke Horton, at 803-351-1244 or bhorton@scda.sc.gov.

PALMETTO LEAF TO OFFER LEADERSHIP DEVELOPMENT FOR AG PROFESSIONALS

Clemson University’s College of Agriculture, Forestry and Life Sciences (CAFLS) and the Public Service and Agriculture (PSA) Division recently announced the Palmetto Leadership Program for the Environment, Agriculture and Forestry (P-LEAF). This two-year intensive instructional, experiential learning and networking program is designed to push agribusiness, forestry, natural resources and environmental professionals to their ultimate career goals and create a leadership pipeline for the state and related P-LEAF industries. The South Carolina Department of Agriculture is a partner in the planning and execution of this initiative, and has a seat on the advisory board.

The tuition-based program takes two years to complete and culminates with participants choosing and developing a practicum project designed to make a difference in their sphere of influence.

P-LEAF applicants should be South Carolina residents fully engaged in South Carolina agriculture, forestry, natural resources or environmental stewardship. Participants will be chosen based on their leadership potential, career stage, and characteristics such as communication skills, integrity, growth potential, and analytical skills. Applicants must be at least 28 years old by January 15, 2020.

Applications for Inaugural Class I (January 2020-December 2022) must be completed and submitted or postmarked no later than Nov. 4, 2019.

For the online application and to learn more about Palmetto LEAF and applicant eligibility, visit clemson.edu/cafls/palmetto-leaf. For more information or questions, contact P-LEAF Director Kirby Player at kplayer@clemson.edu

MANY SC FARMS DON’T USE COMPUTER, INTERNET

BY EVA MOORE

Many more South Carolina farmers have access to computers than just a few years ago — but the Palmetto State still trails other states when it comes to technology.

A new USDA report finds that 58 percent of South Carolina farms in 2019 have access to a desktop or laptop computer. That’s up from just 47 percent in 2017, a dramatic improvement in just two years. Nationally, the portion of farms with access to a computer improved from 72 percent to 73 percent during the same two-year period. Of neighboring states, 70 percent of Georgia farms have access to a computer, and 71 percent of North Carolina farms.

Meanwhile, 74 percent of South Carolina farms have access to the internet, just below the national rate of 75 percent. There are 24,600 farms in the state, according to the USDA.

Not all farmers with internet access are using it in their farm business, though. In 2019, 35 percent of South Carolina farmers were using a computer and internet in their farm business, up from 27 percent two years earlier.

Farmers use the internet for a variety of purposes, including buying farm supplies and equipment, promoting their farms on the web and social media, and applying for federal disaster aid.

South Carolina’s low rate of internet use by farms is part of a larger trend: More than 530,000 people in rural areas of the state lack broadband internet access, according to federal data. That means internet in rural areas is often slow and patchy, making it less reliable for people trying to use computers to conduct business.

The S.C. House of Representatives passed a bill in 2019 to help address the gap in broadband coverage; the bill could be taken up by the state Senate in 2020.
